

My View

Budgeting for the fiscal year can be a tedious and complicated process. You may feel like your analysis and reporting add up to, at best, an educated guess at the resources you'll need to meet your community's needs next year. Implementing performance-based budgeting is an effective way to develop a budget, and with time it can remove some of the typical headaches of the budgeting process. Comcate offers a number of tools that make performance-based budgeting easier and more effective. Give us a call for more information.

Performance-Based Budgeting Can Assist You in Reducing Costs and Increasing Accuracy

The personnel reductions often means that administrators don't have resources to produce an accurate set of data for budget development. In addition, manual budgeting processes can be time-consuming and filled with errors, as your team struggles to verify that they are using the latest and most accurate numbers.

Performance-based budgeting is the practice of developing a budget for a particular department based on the expected results from that department. Here's a brief summary of how budget-based budgeting works:
